YOUR 30-DAY MEAL PLAN

Satisfying Recipes That
Will Keep You Lean

Knowing the GL for all these foods and the corresponding ratios for serving sizes will help you put your daily meal plans together. But I know you want more guidance. That's why I'm also providing a 30-day meal plan to give you a plan to help you construct a month-long nutrition program. These suggestions are based on basic foods and my recipes that come in the later chapters. I've divided the recipes into those for:

- Breakfast
- Lunch and dinner (which I consider interchangeable, regardless of whether you eat two or three meals a day)
- Desserts

One of the questions I get asked most often is, "What if I eat the same lunch or dinner five days or more in a row?"

My answer is that you can eat the same foods as often as you like, and it makes it easier to buy and prepare food. Of course, if you prepare food ahead of time you don't have to eat it the next day. You can store it in the refrigerator or freezer and create more variety while still reducing your prep time.

For instance, I love to get a serving of no-salt edamame and 8 oz of salmon sashimi multiple times a week. It's one of my favorite meals, and I don't get tired of it. And it also fits into my program. Here's how my plate looks (see page 88):

The salmon is the width and thickness of my palm and the first row of my knuckles. Then I double that amount in edamame (in the shell). If that leaves me hungry, then I either add more of these foods or include another food item that fits into my protein-to-carb ratio. Remember, a salad with salsa, lemon juice or oil-free vinaigrette is a free food, and you can also add that.

Sometimes I will add a serving of fruit with dark chocolate melted over it—you can find low-carb forms of dark chocolate if you like the taste (see page 91). It's very important that you eat enough at your meals that you don't feel hungry between meals and consider cheating. It's better to eat a little more during your meals than it is to “sneak” a bit in between. Remember, that's the primary tenet of my program: stopping the release of insulin release between meals is crucial to maximizing release of stored fat.

When you check out my recipes, you'll see examples such as “Steve's Famous Cauliflower Pizza.” This may make you wonder about the protein content, but this main course is high in protein, which is in the cheese and cauliflower. Don't forget that many vegetables are high in protein, especially relative to their calories. That's yet another reason why they're low in GL.

Another question I frequently get asked is, “Should I eat kale—or some other 'healthy' food?” My answer is that you need to ask yourself if you like kale. My guess is that you don't if you're asking me that question. You should try different ways to prepare healthy foods to see if you can find a way that you enjoy them. If you still don't like them, then cut them out of your plan! Otherwise you'll start to resent what you're eating and that will likely sabotage your program.

When I started trying new foods with lower GLs, I found that I liked more and more foods from around the world. That's one of the reason why I've included so many foods from different cultures in the charts in Chapter 5. Many of these were unfamiliar to me until I began to search for ways to broaden my food choices while staying on my own program.

On the other hand, I know that some people couldn't care less about what they eat. They just eat what's in front of them, merely considering a meal to be a means to an end of biological necessity. I consider those people lucky, but I'm not one of them. I'm particular about what I eat. I look forward to each of my three meals a day, and I make sure that each one satisfies me because otherwise I'm going to have a long, miserable five hours between meals. But I want to stay on my own diet, and so I've found the foods and recipes that allow for that.

The next several pages includes an example of a three-meal-a-day program for 30 days. I've provided multiple examples of how you can put your 30-day program together with a lot of variety. Don't take this as a prescription that you need to follow food-by-food every day. Make the food choices that you like.

Superhero Nutrition for Everyone

★ My program will work for you even if you're on another restricted type of diet, you have health issues, or you need to avoid specific foods because of allergies. Here's a fairly lengthy list of other programs you can follow while integrating "Superhero Nutrition." That's one of the huge benefits of my program: It's compatible with many other food-restrictive programs. You can follow Superhero Nutrition at the same time that you follow any of these other plans:

Vegan
Vegetarian
Paleo
Low Carb
Atkins Diet
The Zone

Superhero Nutrition will also work if you want to cut out certain foods because of allergies, intolerances, or ethical or religious beliefs. These include:

Lactose intolerant
Kosher
Halal
Tree-nut allergy
Egg allergy
Milk allergy
Wheat allergy
Peanut allergy
Soy allergy
Corn allergy
Fruit allergy
Garlic allergy

Choose foods that fit your world. Then combine them with this program, and you'll lose more bodyfat than you thought possible. Just remember that timing is the most essential part of Superhero Nutrition and that the foods you choose are secondary. Of course, I don't recommend making poor nutritional choices. You will never get ripped eating sugar or large amounts of other carbohydrates, but you will still lose a substantial amount of bodyfat even if you are not strict with the 1:1.5 and 1:1 program I've laid out.

30-DAY SUPERHERO NUTRITION

Here's my day-by-day example of how to implement and follow my program. Again, you should make the adaptations that are right for you based on the foods you like, and/or those that are on your program. Your hand will do the calorie counting for you, so if you stick to that, you'll always hit the calorie count your body needs.

DAY 1

Drink 1 oz of apple-cider vinegar and 12 oz of water before EVERY meal

Breakfast:

- 1 Large egg with 2 egg whites with tomatoes
 - 1 Large apple

Lunch:

- Green salad with cut tomatoes, with your choice of dressing
 - Chicken/quinoa bowl (recipe on page 171)
 - 1 Large grapefruit

Dinner:

- Green salad with your choice of dressing
- Grilled halibut
- Broccoli
- Cauliflower rice (recipe on page 188)

Superhero Nutrition—Portion Size

★ Some foods or recipes you'll make will come out larger than your hand. But still use your hand metric for your portions—and only eat that amount. After all, it's difficult to determine how many cooked eggs are as big as your hand. That's better determined after cooking than before. And the size of everyone's hand differs.

In my 30-day program, I provide guidance on the foods and portion sizes that may be right for you based on my hand size. But you should adapt these to your own needs and hand size.

DAY 2

Drink 1 oz of apple-cider vinegar and 12 oz of water before EVERY meal

Breakfast:

- Quinoa nut bowl (recipe on page 162)
 - 2 hard boiled egg whites (not the yolk)

Lunch:
